Along with improving capabilities, broader cultural change is essential for success, which needs to be communicated appropriately

The capabilities build the core of the improvement potential of Agile and DevOps

However, a strong culture is essential to ensure the success of the transformation (and should not be consider an optional on-top activity)

The significant amount of change in the organization requires clear and engaging communication

Agile and DevOps capabilities

Pilot Agile and DevOps capabilities

Continuously improve Agile and DevOps capabilities

Agile and DevOps capabilities in all teams (Agile@scale)

A Culture

- A cultural change supports the transformation by changing the behavior and mindsets of the people
- Identity shift from a pure IT shop to a strategic partner of the business
- Willingness to improvise and accept risks (“Fail often and early”)
- Ability to autonomously take decisions (e.g.. freedom in labs) while setting a common direction through the culture
- Support innovation through constructive challenges (e.g., automation competition) and allow rewards to the winners (e.g., trip to Silicon Valley)
- Use OHI to understand pain points and get facts behind them

B Commu-nication

- Good communication is key to get buy-in from all involved stakeholders
- The introduction of Agile and DevOps capabilities, organizational changes, and a new culture causes a significant amount of change in the organization
- Clear and engaging communication of the desired changes is required to create awareness, understanding and excitement
- Visually appealing communication helps simplify the communication

A bottom-up approach to defining the desired culture of an organisation generates buy-in, but requires a selection of individuals to contribute

Identify cultural champions

- Distribute reading material, videos, and contacts on companies spear-heading Agile and DevOps culture (e.g., Facebook, Google)
- Ask interested individuals to invest 2-3 hours to familiarise with the ideas and identify individual preferences
- Evaluate motivation and familiarity of concepts to select 200 cultural champions (e.g., by conducting a quiz and selecting the top scorers)

Define elements of the desired culture in workshop

- Strictly only invite culture sponsors that meet the selection criteria (strictly no exceptions also for managers)
- In workshops with the selected culture champions, jointly develop the cultural elements of the target culture of the IT shop
- Conduct site-visits to Silicon Valley unicorns to understand how to think differently and learn new way of working first-hand (selected managers only)

Derive a final desired target culture

- Through multiple workshops, consolidate elements of the culture into a small set of "culture themes" that describe the desired target culture

The bottom-up approach delivers a clear picture of what the target culture of the organisation should look like along 7 culture themes

I am a leader
By acknowledging that people are integral to everything we do, we naturally grow ourselves and our teams

We are a team
By self-organising across all levels and celebrating wins as a team, we build better things quicker

It is all about people
By fostering ownership and mutual trust – instead of 'command and control' – we unleash our energy and passion

We partner with customers
By putting the customer's voice in everything we do, we unlock the true value in what we deliver

We strive for simplicity
by focusing on the 'minimum viable' in everything we do, we create products that are just right for our customers and just when they need them

We are constantly making everything better
By learning from our mistakes and reflecting on our performance, we can fearlessly push the boundaries of innovation

We are proud to put our name to it By building quality into everything we do and taking pleasure in our craft, we will deliver products our customers want and love

In addition to defining the desired culture, a lasting culture change requires 4 dimensions to be filled with concrete initiatives

Where do you want to go?

- I am a leader
- We are a team
- It is all about people
- We partner with customers
- We strive for simplicity
- We are constantly making everything better
- We are proud to put our name to it

What do you need to do to get there?

Mindset and behavior shifts

Role-modeling
"I see superiors, peers, and subordinates behaving in the new way"

- Leadership actions
- Opinion shapers
- Interactions

Fostering understanding and conviction
"I know what is expected of me – I agree with it, and it is meaningful"

- Story development (e.g.., values, strategy, case for change)
- Story delivery (across relevant levels, i.e., organisational, employee, functional)

Reinforcing with formal mechanisms "The structures, processes, and systems reinforce the change in behavior I am being asked to make"

- Organisation structure
- Targets and metrics
- Management processes
- Business processes
- Rewards, recognition and consequences
- Information systems

Developing talent and skills
"I have the skills and competencies to behave in the new way"

Talent management
- Hiring
- Replacing
- Retaining

Learning
- On-the-job development
- Training
- Action learning

Each of the culture themes needs to be underpinned by specific actions in all 4 dimensions

- I am a leader
- We are a team
- It is all about people
- We partner with customers
- We strive for simplicity
- We are constantly making everything better
- We are proud to put our name to it

By putting the customer's voice in everything we do, we unlock the true value in what we deliver

Role-modelling

- Managers across all teams have weekly meeting with business counterpart to report on status and clarify issues
- Regularly discuss how their directions/guidelines affect customer satisfaction

Fostering understanding and conviction

- Showcase improvements achieved by Agile
- Create a clear vision how collaborating with customer looks like and what the implications are on the team, customer, myself, company, and society

Developing talent and skills

- Increase understanding of business through monthly get-togethers with training
- component for both sides (e.g.., presentation on pro-ducts from business, presentation on technology from IT)

Reinforcing with formal mechanisms

- Collocate business representative in every Agile team
- Introduce customer KPIs and make them part of team performance

A holistic communication plan has to followed to foster the change across the organisation

| | Channel | Description |
|---|---|---|
| Internal communi-cation | Townhalls | ▪ Townhalls are full-day or half-day events with participants from the entire organization▪ Ideally suited to announce big initiatives (e.g., the kick-off an capability model) and celebrate success (e.g., outcome of Agile or DevOps pilots) |
| | E-mail news-letter or blog | ▪ Frequent, short updates to show continuous progress on the transformation to keep momentum going▪ Ideally suited to announce upcoming events, gather feedback on ideas, and announce important changes |
| | Video | ▪ Short videos preferably by well-known personalities in the organisation (e.g., CXO, head of transformation)▪ Ideally suited to reach a wide audience while keeping the personal touch of a townhall |
| | Communities | ▪ Communities are self-organising informal gatherings of people interested in a specific topic (e.g., certain capabilities or tools)▪ Ideally suited to foster knowledge exchange within the organisation to supplement▪ structured coaching approaches |
| External communi-cation | Public presen-tation (e.g., at conferences) | ▪ Active participation in public presentations (e.g., Automation conference) by letting selected staff present their achievements and share approaches with a wider audience and foster knowledge exchange |
| | Roundtables | ▪ Exchange on experiences and best-practices in round tables in the same industry or across industries |
| | Community | ▪ Share the achievements in the transformation and development efforts (e.g., by making key concepts or software tools available as open source) |
